Parking tickets are a bummer. Let's assume you're a good person and not parking in front of fire hydrants or crosswalks: There are probably many reasons why you shouldn't pay your parking ticket. In New York, for instance, cops gave millions of dollars of tickets for parking in spaces that were technically legal. But contesting tickets is both annoyingly time-consuming and requires some skills, and lawyers are expensive. But what if you could hire a robot lawyer for cheap? Your friends who are still paying their law school student debt might protest, but there is a new legal chatbot that can get you out of your fees. The lawyerbot can do two things—help appeal a ticket in the U.K. or in New York, and help you get compensation for a delayed flight. The app is called, somewhat unambiguously, DoNotPay, and it dispenses legal advice. Sign up, type in your legal question, and the artificial-intelligence lawyer will walk you through the process of appealing your ticket, just like a real lawyer, only without the too-firm handshake, the BMW, and the big legal bill. Right now, the lawyerbot can do two things—help appeal a ticket in the U.K., or in New York, and help you get compensation for a delayed flight. The robots are coming for all our jobs, and the Internet is destroying all kinds of middlemen. And while nobody will lament the obviation of lawyers, there are actually people whose job is to contest parking tickets, although like most jobs that can be done by machines, it is thankless and repetitive. Africa Studio via Shutterstock The chatbot lawyer, created by 19-year-old Londoner Joshua Browder, has so far gotten 160,000 tickets dismissed in the U.K. and New York in just 21 months. "The process for appealing the fines is relatively formulaic and perfectly suits AI," writes the Guardian's Samuel Gibbs. The bot even produces the documents needed for your appeal. Browder isn't the only one looking to replace lawyers with apps. Legalswipe is a free app that "informs people of their rights during interactions with police." And it doesn't just offer smart advice—the app actually gets involved while the police are harassing you. Legalswipe was built by Christian Levien, a law professor at the University of Ottawa, who says he was assaulted by police when he was a teen. The app is meant to be used while you are interacting with the police and offers fast advice, tells you the exact wording to use in a situation, can record audio and video and save it to Dropbox so it's available if the cop steals your phone, and it'll even broadcast your location to your emergency contacts. The chatbot lawyer has so far gotten 160,000 tickets dismissed in the U.K. and New York in just 21 months. Lawyers are expensive, so most people only see one when they're issued a public defender, which is far from ideal. There are also plenty of other situations where you need legal advice but are unlikely to hire a lawyer thanks to cost—situations like claiming against parking fines or checking contracts. In fact, contracts are another field that's perfect for AI, and at least one startup, called Beagle, will read through any length of contract, including anything in the fine print, and highlight what you need to know, giving you a visual summary. Browder sees DoNotPay as a way to protect regular people. "I think the people getting parking tickets are the most vulnerable in society," he told VentureBeat. "These people aren't looking to break the law. I think they're being exploited as a revenue source by the local government." His next project takes this even further, helping refugees apply for asylum. This is exactly what the Internet is good at, taking services and products that are kept deliberately opaque and expensive, like car dealerships for example, and opening them up so that people can make their own decisions. Skip to main content Where all those postcard-perfect pictures of Savannah get taken. Let's start big picture here. Savannah's (much smaller) answer to Central Park, Forsyth Park marks the boundary between the downtown historic district and the rest of the city; in other words, it's where tourists and locals converge. If you're walking down Bull Street, simply continue onto the sidewalk that runs north to south through Forsyth, a wide avenue lined by live oak trees. On the north side of the park, the elegant Forsyth fountain is more than 150 years old, and the image you're most apt to see on a brochure boasting of Savannah's beauty; on the south side, the Forsyth Farmers' Market takes over every Saturday, year round, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. There's a playground for kids, a bandshell that's home to the Savannah Jazz Festival, and a shaded sidewalk around the park's perimeter that's popular with runners and dog-walkers. Any standout features or must-sees? Spanning just 30 acres, the park is easy to get through on a single stroll. The southern end is recreational, with basketball and tennis courts. The northern end, closest to the historic district has a Confederate monument in the middle; in recent years, the Savannah City Council has weighed options regarding its fate, including possible removal. The tree-shaded north end is also the loveliest place to have a picnic, or just loll around for a while. Look up into the trees for a glimpse of a pair of red-tailed hawks that hang out on the low branches; look east across Drayton Street to see the Candler Oak, a massive tree thought to be roughly 300 years old. Was it easy to get around? Unlike some of Savannah's older sidewalks, the paths in Forsyth Park are smooth and well-maintained, and benches are everywhere. The park is well-lighted and gorgeous—particularly the fountain—at night. Biking is another popular way to get around, but watch for signs near the fountain ordering riders to dismount. More To Discover Let's start big picture. What's the vibe here? Toronto's largest public park has 400 acres that range from manicured lawns to themed gardens to untouched nature. In addition to the greenery, there are a number of more interactive activities, including a zoo, an outdoor swimming pool, tennis courts, ice skating rinks (or frozen ponds in winter), a dog run, and playgrounds. It's a park designed for all Torontonians and visitors to use however they best see fit, whether for leisure, sport, or fitness. Fun! Any standout features or must-sees? While most tourists stick to the Hillside Gardens area of the park, which centers around the Grenadier Cafe, there's plenty more to discover. If you're traveling with kids, consider visiting the High Park Nature Centre, which hosts programs and classes for both children and adults. There's also the Colborne Lodge, the former home of John and Jemima Howard, who left their land to the city of Toronto to create the park. For a lesser-known gem, visit the Lesya Ukrainka monument, dedicated to the famous Ukrainian writer who championed civil and women's rights. Got it. Was it easy to get around? Being one of Toronto's most popular urban parks, the entire site is well maintained, and it's easy to find all the major attractions. But in order to get away from the crowds, it's best to "get lost" on the winding trails through the nature areas. That sounds cool. All said and done, what—and who—is this best for? The park is free of charge, and so are some of its main attractions, like the zoo. Located right in the heart of Toronto, it's easy to reach, making it great for a morning or afternoon activity. You'll find a mix of locals and tourists here. Skip to main content Everything you've heard and more. Photos Reviewed by Katie James Watkinson Let's start big picture. What's the vibe here? Step off the crowded sidewalks of 59th Street into Central Park and you'll hardly realize what lies before you: 693 acres of man-made gardens, meadows, forests, and rolling hillsides. If you ambled down every one of Central Park's pathways, you would walk 58 miles. (That's not a challenge, please don't.) Along the way, you pass fountains, monuments, sculptures, bridges, and arches. Plus 21 playgrounds, a winter ice-skating rink, a zoo, and even a castle. But you'd hardly notice the four major crosstown thoroughfares, which cleverly disappear into foliage-covered tunnels. What you will do is break out into a Sound of Music-style sprint upon arriving at Sheep Meadow or the Great Lawn, vast landscapes dotted with New Yorkers looking to escape the urban jungle in which they reside. Any standout features or must-sees? Embrace your inner child at Conservatory Water, the seasonal pond on the East Side (from 72nd to 75th Streets) made famous in E.B. White's iconic children's novel, Stuart Little. Here you'll find nautical enthusiasts both young and old navigating radio and wind-powered boats across the pond's shimmering waters. Was it easy to get around? Manhattan's urban grid disappears among the winding paths and dense foliage of Central Park. Even seasoned city dwellers can get turned around. But there's a trick to reorienting yourself: Check the numbers at the base of any lamp post. Each is inscribed with four numbers—the first two digits indicate the nearest cross-street; the second two signal whether you're closer to the east or west side of the park (even numbers mean east; odd, west). If you never venture north of Times Square, NYC might seem entirely flat, but Central Park will prove otherwise. So whether you're jogging or in a wheelchair (most of the park is handicap-accessible), mentally prepare yourself for some winded inclines. All said and done, what is this best for? Central Park is the unicorn of New York City: You can pass an entire day here and never spend a dollar. More To Discover Part hotel, part members club, and the sibling to The Ned London.
